#PushingForProgress featured discussions among political, civic and labor leaders addressing the factors that defined historic elections in Georgia, Florida and Texas in 2020—both wins and losses for progressive candidates—and what they mean for future efforts to retain and build on a progressive majority.

“If we want to hold and build on these gains in 2022 and 2024, we have an urgent need to learn the lessons of 2020, including what went right and what went wrong.” —Andi Pringle, Political and Strategic Campaigns Director of March On

“Thank you. This was the most informative hour ever.” --Facebook

“Watching for ideas to get voter turnout!” --Facebook
“America and the world owe Georgia a great deal of gratitude.” —Terrance Woodbury, HIT Strategies

“There is no path to building a more progressive Georgia that doesn’t run through Black voters.” —Fenika Miller, Black Voters Matter

“We have to re-envision what we are saying and what we are building and not just make it about the election. An election is a moment in time, is an outcome of all the good work that comes up to that point.” —Alphonso Mayfield, SEIU

“If you want us to win a state like Florida, and you want to invest in us in September and October, then you get what you get.” —Roxey Nelson, 1199SEIU

“Texas is the opportunity for us to close the door on this protracted argument about the role of government... Texas must be in play moving forward.” —Derrick Johnson, NAACP

“If you pick a state where your Democrats are going to get up and keep fighting, it’s Texas.” —Kendall Scudder, Represent Texas

“We have to re-envision what we are saying and what we are building and not just make it about the election. An election is a moment in time, is an outcome of all the good work that comes up to that point.” —Alphonso Mayfield, SEIU

“If you want us to win a state like Florida, and you want to invest in us in September and October, then you get what you get.” —Roxey Nelson, 1199SEIU

“Texas is the opportunity for us to close the door on this protracted argument about the role of government... Texas must be in play moving forward.” —Derrick Johnson, NAACP

“If you pick a state where your Democrats are going to get up and keep fighting, it’s Texas.” —Kendall Scudder, Represent Texas